

We went to Brierfield Iron works. There was a ruin of the furnace that was pretty cool. There were green rocks every where but it was really "slag" because when people mined for iron they burned that off to get to the iron. We went on a 1.25 mile hike and I found a - well Noah gave me a hiking stick. After that we went to Orr Park, a long time ago a bunch of trees got damaged but one guy didn't want to chop them down so he just carved cool shapes into them. (Mostly faces, one looked like Dumbledore.) Then we ate lunch and went home.

This is a furnace
Where They
would make iron during the civil War to make cahohs

This furnace
made high
grade iron
but wasn't
used much
after the Civil War

This is slag,
it's a by-
product from making iron

This slag
is 150 years
old

we went on a hike and found a table with this on it

covered
bridge

(I was on a merry-go-
round)

This is our park,
these trees are all
dead but a guy didn't want to tear them
down so he turned them
into art

(I am making the names up)
